Watch for

In cursive both letters are built from the same element, the one identical to a dotless Latin cursive l, so the shapes themselves may not carry the difference at all. The sources give волшебник, meaning magician, and домик, meaning little house, in which the combinations лш and ми are written identically, and мщу against лицу, which become absolutely identical in cursive. Resolve such a run at the level of the whole word, using the language and the surrounding context, rather than letter by letter.
